Read the following text and answer the questions No.43 to No.50

1- As a Joke writer for Bob Hope for 20 years ,Gene Perret had taken hundreds of flights. So he was only half listening when the air steward began reciting safety instructions. Suddenly Perret's ears pricked up. "There may be 50 ways to leave your lover," the steward said. "but there are only five ways to leave this aeroplane." And then: "Please return your seat to its upright and most uncomfortable position. Later you may lean back and break the knees of the passenger behind you."

2- Perret uses this story to make a serious point: humour can grab someone's attention and get a message across. "Some people can't tell a joke to save their lives," says Perret, "but everyone can learn to use humour effectively." The secret is developing your own style, learning a few tricks and taking the time to practise.

3- The first step Perret recommends is building a "comedy collection." Jot down 25 jokes, asides or stories that you find funny. Then work out whether you are better with stories or one-liners. Don't try to be what you're not. Matching people with the wrong material is "like teaching a pig to sing," Perret says. "It not only wastes your time, it annoys the pig."

4- Look for humour on a regular basis, not just before you intend to use it. Joke books are OK, but Perret suggests looking for material from your own experience. He tells a story about helping his little daughter prepare to recite a poem at kindergarten. When he offered to write one for her, she said, "No, Dad, this is in front of the whole school. I'd rather it was good." Nothing puts people more at ease than self-deprecating humour.

5- Be careful with insulting humour. Once at a company function, Perret based a whole routine on a copying machine that never worked. In mid-speech, the manager of the department that made the machine stormed out. It taught Perret never to cut too close to the bone. He now teases audiences only about matters that they joke about themselves.

6- A few more hints: Keep your material short, tell it slowly and, no matter how hilarious they are.

43- What is the main idea of the first paragraph?

1. Bob Hope was the most famous joke writer.
2. Even experienced joke writers come across interesting jokes unexpectedly.
3. As a joke writer, nothing interested Gene Perret.
4. Safety instructions are usually funny.

44- According to the first paragraph, the steward was.....

1. attracting the attention of the passengers to something which they would probably not pay much attention
2. making fun of things that are usually important in her job
3. talking unrelated sentences
4. not doing her job properly
