If you feel you need to end your talk with a joke, make sure you go out with the bang. When a closing joke falls flat, it is almost impossible to recover. Even the most experienced comedians have to be prepared for an occasional misfire. That's when the pros pull out their life-saver—a line that helps make up for the bomb. When Bob Hope bungles a line, he sometimes follows it by saying, "my wife told me that story would never work. I see you all side with her." A few more hints: keep your material short, tell it slowly and, no matter how hilarious they are, don't laugh at your own jokes while you're telling them. Like tennis or golf, successful humor comes with the doing. The next time someone asks how to get to the ALBERT Hall, remember to reply, "Practise, practise, practise."
