For sure people have many different memories about their trips. I do have a lot of memories. One of the most interesting ones happened when I went to London in December 8th. One midday while I was sitting in a warm and comfortable restaurant, and I was busy looking at the menu, the waiter came to me to take order. I had put my backpack, my camera, and a book of poem which was my favorite on the table. It belonged to a well-known poet. I ordered my food. He brought me the appetizer, fried mushroom indeed. As it was my habit, I started to have the mushrooms with some bread. At the same time I was singing in a soft gentle voice. A piece of light music was played there. When the waiter came back to bring the entrée, he assured me in Farsi that I had ordered the best food of that restaurant. I couldn't believe my ears. He was my compatriot.
